

DOCK

Guy Begbie and Steve Hanson

The new Alderman arrives, on the shoulders of the new idiots. Flags and flowers. A scene conjured for all except those inside The Citadel, where these things are irrelevant. Outside, the scene intensifies, to the point where it replaces the rest of the surroundings.

The Citadel swaps symptoms for causes, Ouroboros returns, with its divine purpose: winking out of existence. The removal of the tail does not involve a 'cut' or 'cuts', it requires nothing short of parthenogenesis in reverse.

In this backwards maternity ward, criminals stand to be judged: Judgements applied to others of similar habits, judgements which quickly become the common name of various species of the genus: coarse, thickened rootstock, sheathing stipules, paniced, inconspicuous racemes.

The casual occultism of the naming: Merlin, stepping into the misty cave of mirrors, a place where waiting crowds can't see work or witchery. The back door opens onto a cove where barrels lie. Giant ships disgorge commandeered crudities, before taking their processed, magicalized dancing tables back to the raw lands.
